WHAT has been said of the late Dr. Farmer's books, may, in a considerable degree, be applied to the following collection; it being premised, that what is further offered concerning Mr. Reed or his Library, relates to both with a view particularly to English Literature.

“ For the improvement of Sale Catalogues, it has been usual to exhibit such manuscript remarks as occurred in volumes, that had been the property of distinguished characters. Sometimes, however, the observations of the late Mr. Reed, respecting the rarity of his books, or the authors and subjects of them, are so extensive, that the introduction of all such memoranda would have encreased the present Catalogue perhaps three-fold. These notices, therefore; are cited only on particular occasions; but the reader will find such information at the beginning beginning, or in other parts, of many works enumerated in the following pages."

Nor will the reader often, if ever, have occasion to complain of a misplaced confidence in the value and authenticity of the intelligence, which these remarks afford. Accustomed to exercise the minutest accuracy in ascertaining the history as well as the character of publications, Mr. Reed has recorded circumstances relating to some, of which the authors were anonymous; to others, of which mistaken notions had been formed; and to several in which erroneous assertions have been stated: there are also some, in which he has inserted brief remarks of other writers on the subject, and the interesting epistolary correspondence of authors. He had been a judicious collector more than forty years; and few days passed, in which he was free from illness, that did not witness, within that period, some curious addition of this kind to the literary history of his country. Of his ingenuity and sound judgment the world has received abundant proof in his notes on the re-published OLD
PLAYS

PLAYS, which Doddsley had first collected; as well as in those on SHAKSPEARE: and the useful occupation of his time will be further exemplified, not only by these notices in printed books, but also by the contents of a few manuscripts in the present collection. And, while thus employed himself, he was at the same time never more happy than in encouraging the literary pursuits of others. To Mr. Reed no man ever applied in vain for the information which he could give; and no man retired from an interview of this nature without confessing himself, if not gratified by the immediate acquisition of the knowledge required, at least improved by the uncommon erudition of the critic, and delighted with the frank and friendly temper of the man. He was, indeed, a most friendly man; endeared to all who knew him by his unassuming manners, his instructive conversation, and his honest heart. He was stern, and justly stern, only when he detected in others the violation of truth, and observed sophistry assuming the place of argument. With an independent spirit he displayed also a truly modest and retired disposition:

disposition: surrounded with books, and content with a very moderate income, to him; as Prospero says,

————— “ his library ———
“ Was dukedom large enough.” —————

This collection, it may be added, consists, without any intermixture, entirely of Mr. Reed's books; and is classed in a manner conformable to an opinion on this subject which he had often expressed. To specify the rarities in it, would be here unnecessary. They speak for themselves. And, upon the whole, it may be affirmed, that, in curious English literature, a more interesting collection has not often been amassed, and will not easily perhaps be equalled.

Reed.—*This Volume was given to me, at the request of Mr. Serward, by Mr. Hastings, who desired it might be transmitted to Posterity in such a manner as would be least liable to be lost. I know no better way than to order it to be sold,

- 14 8828 MS. Extracts by Mr. Steevens, from a MS. belonging to King's College Library, Cambridge, of which Mr. Bryant gives the following account.
- " It seems to be written in the provincial dialect of one of the western Counties, and in many respects similar to that of Pierce Plowman. The subject of the Poem is the History of William, a Royal Foundling and of Werwolf, by whom he was preserved. By a Werwolf is meant a Wizard Wolf, λυκανθρωπος of the ancients; which was supposed to have been a wolf so changed from a Man, and to be gifted with human intellect. The whole is a translation from a Romance Poem in French for which we are indebted to Humphrey Bohun, Earl of Hereford, who was nephew to King Edward the Second, as we are informed in the Poem, 4to. 18 sheets
- 8 8829. MS. Translations which have never been published of Dr. King's Templum Libertatis, by John Ellis, the scrivener, translator of Maphæus. They were given to me by Mr. Sewell, to whom he left his MS. J. R. 4to.
